BREEDING STEEL DUTCH

by Raymond H. Smith

(Editor's Note: We welcome Mr. Smith back into membership in the ADRC after a prolonged absence due to what he thought was an allergy to his rabbits. We are very happy to hear that this was not true and that he has been able to secure some of his old stock and will soon be back into competition with some of those fine Steels he has bred in the past. The following article is one written by Mr. Smith and appearing in the March, 1955 Dutch Reporter. JW)

I have been breeding Steels for only five years, so I am still learning. But maybe what I have experienced in breeding this color may keep some other breeder from becoming disgusted in the breeding of this beautiful color. As you know, when you have secured that good Steel color, you have something to be proud of.

I think I shall have to go along with the "Old Timers" who say, "Steels are a made color." As you will see by my breeding of Steels, I had to put some blue in my Steels. Just like mixing paint, you mix a little of this color with a little of that color to get the right shade you desire. As I go along, describing my breeding of Steels, you will see what I mean.

In breeding Steels, I have one Steel doe who has had two litters of all Steel color offspring. This was accomplished in this way: I took my Steel buck (Beaver bloodline) and bred him to this Steel doe (Dugan bloodline). From this litter I saved a Steel buck. This buck was bred back to his mother, the Dugan doe. I have secured two litters of all Steels this way. When I breed my Beaver buck with the Dugan doe, I get mostly blacks and grays, maybe there will be one or two steels in the litter. I have other steel does that I bred to the steel bucks, but did not get any litters of 100% steel color.

On going back and looking at the pedigrees of the Beaver Steel buck, I note Mr. Beaver (the late Ancil Beaver) bred a black to a steel, or a black to a gray. Also on the Dugan does pedigree, I notice Mr. Dugan bred a black to a steel, in all three generations on the pedigree. My steels from this type of breeding were getting too dark over the back and on the ears; too much black, and lacked ticking. So from this I got the idea of trying some blue crossing. I find by using some blue I get the good slate under-color, and it also does away with the brassy color commonly found in steels. When I say "use Blue", I mean a good blue, one that is a dark slate-blue color, and I would not use a blue that has a lilac color, or is a light faded blue.

I was using my gray Dutch in breeding steels, but I found the young from the continued steel-gray cross were much too brassy in color; the brassiness showed up especially inside the hind legs and on the sides. Also, in breeding grays to steels, some of the offspring will be half-way between a steel color and a gray color, the kind of color very difficult to classify as steel, or gray, one you don't know just what color to show them as -- always in doubt.

I breed a steel buck which has steel and black in his pedigree to a blue doe of blue color bloodlines for three generations in her pedigree. In these litters I have always got 2 or 3 good colored steels; also one or two blacks and grays. Take the young does from his breeding and breed them back to the steel buck (sire) and you will get a majority of Steels in the litters, with perhaps an occasional black or blue-gray. Use the blue-gray back to the steel. In this type of breeding for steel color, I have never had any judge remark that the steel color is "too brassy", or "too dark over the back and ears". Also, the grays from this type of breeding will be of good color and not so brassy.

The steel doe that won Best Steel for me at the 1954 Convention in York, Pa., has been in three shows. In the three shows, she has had judges remarks, such as, "Very good color". Never "brassy" or "too dark" in the remarks. She is from the steel and blue cross, and is now bred back to the steel "Beaver" buck. This is her first mating, and I can hardly wait to see what I will find in the nest box.

In using the steel and blue breeding, I find it wise to never use a blue doe that has black breeding in her pedigree. I have tried this with such a doe, by breeding her to a steel buck which also has black in his pedigree. The results -- six black youngsters. I am now experimenting with these black youngsters, and am going to breed them to steels which have blue bloodlines in them, to see what I will get.

One thing I do not want a breeder of black Dutch to do, and this is to take a black from a steel breeding and use it in his black strain. If he does, he will get white hairs galore. I found this out the hard way.

I am hoping that some day I will be able to take the steels from the steel and blue breeding and get a strain that will throw all-steel litters of good color.

1. The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It emphasizes that every entry should be supported by a valid receipt or invoice. This ensures transparency and allows for easy auditing of the accounts.

2. The second section covers the process of reconciling bank statements with the company's ledger. It provides a step-by-step guide on how to identify discrepancies and investigate their causes. Regular reconciliation is crucial for detecting errors and preventing fraud.

3. The third part of the document addresses the issue of budgeting and cost control. It explains how to set realistic budgets for different departments and track actual spending against these budgets. This helps in identifying areas where costs are exceeding expectations and taking corrective actions.

4. The fourth section discusses the importance of timely payment of bills and invoices. It outlines the consequences of late payments, such as damaged relationships with suppliers and potential penalties. It also provides tips on how to manage cash flow effectively to ensure that all obligations are met on time.

5. The final part of the document covers the annual financial review. It describes how to prepare a comprehensive report on the company's financial performance for the year, including key metrics and trends. This report is essential for informing stakeholders and making strategic decisions for the future.

6. The document also includes a section on tax compliance. It provides an overview of the current tax laws and regulations that apply to the company. It offers practical advice on how to ensure that all tax obligations are met accurately and on time, minimizing the risk of penalties and interest.

7. Another section focuses on the use of technology in financial management. It highlights the benefits of using accounting software to streamline processes, reduce errors, and improve the efficiency of financial reporting. It also discusses the importance of data security and backup procedures.

8. The document concludes with a section on financial forecasting. It explains how to use historical data and market trends to make informed predictions about the company's future financial performance. This helps in planning for future growth and identifying potential risks.

9. The document also includes a section on financial reporting. It provides a detailed explanation of the different types of financial statements, such as the balance sheet, income statement, and cash flow statement. It also discusses the importance of presenting this information in a clear and concise manner for the benefit of all stakeholders.

10. Finally, the document offers some general tips and best practices for effective financial management. It emphasizes the importance of regular communication with financial advisors and the need to stay up-to-date on the latest financial news and trends.
