DUTCHENG TIPS

Breeding Black and Blue Dutch

by Tom Shufflebotham

(Editor's Note: This article first appeared in a Dutch Reporter for June 1953.)

Almost anyone you may talk to on this matter will have a different idea of breeding black and blues to improve the color. As little Johnny Staff-Sargeant Baker says, "It's just one man's opinion."

I lay no claim to being an expert on genetics, in fact I could never follow the explanations on genetics. My explanation of breeding procedures is that of a very much interested breeder who has always tried to hold and improve color of both black and blue, and have acquired some very definite ideas on the subject.

There are those who will tell you that you can hold color of both by straight black to black or blue to blue breeding. However, I have never found this to be the case. I feel pretty sure of myself when I state that you must use both black and blue cross to hold and improve the color of each. It has been my experience that straight blue to blue breeding if carried to great lengths, tends to lighter blues, or mealy colored blues that fade rather easily. In the blacks, black to black matings carried too far tend to introduce rustiness.

I have and do, carry my breeding pure for several generations, but always bring in the black to blue or the blue to black. I grant that complications can arise here; the chief one is "wall" or "speckled" eyes. However, I have found a satisfactory method of combating this hazard. I know that if you take a black that has been bred for generations, mate it to a blue of several generations of pure blue breeding, you can expect speckled eyes in your litters. I am certain that the secret is in fusing the two colors.

I feel that the color in the Dutcheng strain compares favorably with the best I have seen and eye trouble is practically non-existent in my strain. In the first place the blue is considered nothing but a dilute black, which I am sure is the case. Also that blue is recessive to black. I have found that there are two types of black -- one is the straight breeding black, the other is the impure black (which is in reality a blue). This latter is the one that carries the best black color, it has more depth and sheen to it than the straight black. There are, in fact, very few straight breeding blacks. My best colored blacks are not the straight bred blacks, but rather the impure ones. The only advantage that the straight bred black has over the other one is that it carries a little deeper eye color.

In my years of Dutch breeding, I have never seen a black in a litter from two blues, regardless of how the blues were produced. Mated blue to blue, the result has always been 100% blues. On the other hand it is quite common to get blues from black to black mating. These blues are generally the best colored blues and are the ones that should be mated to blacks to improve both the color of black and blue. Infusing the black to blue in this manner, you lessen the prevalence of eye trouble, peckled, wall, and so forth. It has not proved wise for me to mate a blue to several generations blue breeding into my blacks -- in fact, I feel that this is where the eye trouble originates.

When mating one of the black-bred blues back into the blacks, the ratio of blacks in the litter will be almost 100%. They will all have black coats, but some will actually be blue. Some of them would be true breeding blacks and others would be blue. For this reason blues sometimes show up in the black to black matings. I have never thought this too important whether the blacks are true breeding black or not, but if you wish to find out, I would suggest that the rabbit in question be mated to a blue. If the resulting litter contains blues, the black is an impure black. Mated to another impure black you will get a percentage of blues in the litter. These are usually the best colored blues. The blacks, too, will be a deep black. I find the only drawback to this type of breeding, is that some of the blacks will not have the deep hazel eye color that is necessary. However, this is more than compensated for by the fact that speckled or wall eyes seldom appear in the litter.

In my experience speckled or wall eyes generally come from straight or pure-bred matings. Perhaps an expert in genetics would go about producing the same results in a different manner. I, however, am well satisfied with the results I am attaining by the matings as described. Many breeders and judges have asked how I get and keep the color in my black and blue stock. I hold no secretas; this is it!

SECRETARY'S CHIT-CHAT

by J. Weinhardt

With the National Convention and Show practically upon us, there doesn't seem to be much to talk about this month, so I will make up my article principally from the letters that have come to me recently.

A recent letter from Grace Staneart of Middletown, Indiana, tells me that both Grace and her husband have been in quite poor health during the past few months and have been pretty much confined to their home territory. She tells me how much she misses her many friends made over the years while attending rabbit show. She also would like to hear what kind of progress the Indiana Dutch Rabbit Club, of which she was the main spark-plug for many years, is making. Why don't some of you members of that club sit down and write to Grace and Harry, or even pay them a visit? What fun we did have when they held the Indiana Dutch Club Shows at their place. The address is R# 2, Box 206, Middletown, Indiana.

Another letter (with a check proving that "our" Johnny Baker is really back with us, tells of the groundwork being laid for the reactivating of the New York State Dutch Rabbit Club. He tells me that they held their first meeting at Syracuse in June and came up with 13 members. Hope to hear more about that before too long.

A letter from George Smith of Thomaston, Conn. tells me of the fine Fair show held in his area recently in which Dutch led the field in size of entry with sixty making a very nice display.

A report from our Convention Dutch Breed Chairman, Bob Ernst lists the following specials for Dutch, some of which came in too late to be listed in the catalog:

Best of each color will win $5.00, while Best Opp. Sex of each color will win $2.50. Each 1st. in all six varieties will receive $1.25 in Special money besides the regular class money. There will also be $3.00 for Best Senior All Colors and $3.00 for best Junior All Colors. Best Display will win $6.00 and 2nd. Best Display will win

$4.00. With all of these fine specials we should really have an outstanding display of Dutch. Bob has sure done a fine job for all of us.

I suspect is no news to most of you that the 1964 National Dutch Show has been awarded to the Ann Arbor Rabbit Breeders Ass'n. and will be held at the Washtenaw Farm Council Building on the Ann Arbor-Saline Road on April 24-26, 1964. The members of the club have been hard at work making plans for your pleasure and comfort and we will begin sending out complete publicity reports starting with the November issue. We have a very enthusiastic bunch of rabbit breeders in this territory and I know that they will do an outstanding job. Speaking of the 1964 NDS at a recent show in Ohio, I was highly gratified at all of the enthusiasm and promises of support that were pledged.

You may look for a full report of Convention activities in the November Dutch Reporter.
